1. Introduction

This document presents the comparison of character set selection for internationalized domain names given in IDNAbis tables [1] and character by character choice done by local language teams under PAN localization project. Eight languages are considered namely Bengali, Dzongkha, Khmer, Lao, Mongolian, Nepali, Pashto and Urdu.

2. Label Separators

In IDNA2003 [2, 3, 4, 5], three characters are listed to be treated as label separators. In IDNAbis[1], only ASCII period is allowed to be used. If other characters are required for any language, they are expected to be mapped before using or storing the domain name. Language specific delimiters identified in our study are given in Table 2.1.

Table 2.1 List of Delimiters

Language	Character	Unicode
Dzongkha	འ	U+0F7F
Urdu and Pashto	□	U+06D4

Language interface handling these particular languages will handle these delimiters in addition to FULL STOP U+002E. It is noted that all languages did not decide to use their sentence separator marks to be used as label separators. For example, In Nepali U+0964 is used as sentence marker but they decided to use FULL STOP U+002E as label separator in domain names.

3. Comparison of Character Set Selection

Some characters are considered PVALID in IDNAbis table whereas not allowed in character by character decision of PAN teams. This case mostly occurred because a script is used to write multiple languages and there are many characters which are relevant for one language but not used in the other. Such characters can only be handled properly when language being used in the domain name is known. This language based filter can be applied on the top IDNAbis tables in language table at registry. More critical mismatches are where IDNAbis tables are disallowing some characters when in local community's opinion, they should be included. In this section, the comparison of character set selection using IDNAbis table and feedback from native speakers is presented.

3.1. Bengali

Bengali is an Indic language which uses Bengali script, closely related to Devanagari script, both deriving from Brahmi script. Unicode block of Bengali is U+0980 – U+09FF. There are following PVALID characters which are either not used in Bengali or can be omitted without changing the meaning of word. So it is decided by Bengali community that these characters should be disallowed in Bengali domain names to reduce the risk of phishing. List of these characters is given in Table 3.1.

Table 3.1: Bengali Characters Disallowed in Language Table

঴	09F1	Bengali Letter Ra With Lower Diagonal	No	PVALID

In the Table 3.2, the Bengali characters are given which are disallowed by IDNAbis but required by the native speakers. These characters can be decomposed to PVALID characters with combination of Bengali Sign Nukta U+09BC but Bengali users are not accustomed with Nukta sign. It is rather disallowed in the table above to prevent ambiguous input. To solve this issue these characters will be decomposed at application level before referring to IDNAbis tables.

All the characters of Bengali block with their status decided by language community and IDNabis algorithm are given in Appendix A.1.

3.2. Dzongkha

Dzongkha is written in Tibetan script which itself is motivated by the syllabic Devanagari writing system. Tibetan's Unicode block is U+0F00-U+0FFF. There are many characters which are allowed in IDNabis table but in Dzongkha speakers view not likely to appear in the plain text. Such characters listed in Table 3.3 can be disallowed at registry level in language table.

The characters listed in Table 3.4 are disallowed by IDNabis table but required by language community. They have equivalent decomposed forms which are permitted in IDNabis tables. So these characters can be used by user and proper normalization should be done at application level. At registry level, these characters will not be allowed.

There are two characters given in Table 3.5 which are used to mark syllable boundary in Dzongkha and are required to write words correctly. TIBETAN MARK INTERSYLLABIC TSHEG U+0F0B is required in domain names whereas TIBETAN MARK DELIMITER U+0F0C is recommended to be normalized to U+0F0B to avoid ambiguity in domain names. TIBETAN MARK INTERSYLLABIC TSHEG U+0F0B should be allowed in domain names.

All the characters of Dzongkha block with their status decided by language community and IDNAbis algorithm are given in Appendix A.2.

3.3. Khmer

Khmer is an Austro-Asiatic language and script and language of Cambodia. Its Unicode range is U+1780-U+17FF. In Table 3.6 the characters are listed which are not considered necessary to be used in Khmer domain names by native speakers. These characters can be restricted at registry level on top of the IDNAbis table.

There is no character of Khmer found which is disallowed in IDNAbis but required by the language community of Khmer.

All the characters of Khmer block with their status decided by language community and IDNAbis algorithm are given in Appendix A.3.

3.4. Lao

Unicode code block for Lao is U+0E80–U+0EFF. Following are Lao characters in Table 3.7 which are not considered necessary for domain names by Lao community. These are allowed in IDNAbis table level but can be restricted at language table level.

There is no character of Lao which is disallowed in IDNAbis but required by the language community of Lao. All the characters of Lao block with their status decided by language community and IDNAbis algorithm are given in Appendix A.4.

3.5. Mongolian

Mongolian is written in Cyrillic script. Cyrillic script has been derived from Greek script and has been traditionally used to write Slavic languages, including Russian. The Mongolian character set is slightly modified Cyrillic alphabet by adding two vowels such as (ə, ɣ). Unicode block of Cyrillic is U+0400 – U+04FF. There are many characters in Cyrillic script which are not used in Mongolian. Knowing the language, we can eliminate these characters from valid characters for Mongolian domain names. These characters are recommended to be excluded at registry level for Mongolian domain names. All such characters are listed in Table 3.8.

Cyrillic script requires case folding similar to Latin script. There are no characters found which are disallowed by IDNAbis and required by Mongolian users. All the characters of Cyrillic block with their status decided by language community and IDNAbis algorithm are given in Appendix A.5.

3.6. Nepali

Nepali is an Indo-Aryan language which uses Devanagari script derived from Brahmi script. Unicode block of Devanagari is U+0900 – U+097F. Nepali uses a subset of the script. Two consonants of Nepali which are not in popular used are recommended to be normalized to their more frequent variant forms. These characters should not be allowed at registry level. The variant are listed in Table 3.9.

There is one character .U+970, DEVANAGARI ABBREVIATION SIGN which is required by Nepali users and not allowed in IDNAbis table. All the characters of Devanagari block with their status decided by language community and IDNAbis algorithm are given in Appendix A.6.

3.7. Pashto

Pashto is written in Arabic script and uses extended Arabic character set. The following Arabic block characters given in Table 3.11 are not used in plain text. These characters are not likely to be used in domain names for Pashto. It is recommended to exclude them from valid domain name characters to avoid confusing domain names.

In Arabic character set there are many such characters which are repeated for different language allowing redundancy. For example, two sets of digits are there, one for Arabic language and other for other language e.g. Persian, Urdu. There is very likely chance that users will confuse between these characters. It is suggested to normalize these characters on look up. Following are such characters and their normalized characters for Pashto.

3.8. Urdu

Urdu is written in Arabic script and uses extended Arabic character set similarly as Pashto. As shown in Table 3.11 for Pashto, following characters given in Table 3.14 are also not recommended to be used in Urdu domain names.

There are characters with the similar shape which are confusable with each other and each language makes its own decision for which one to include and others to normalize to that character. Such characters and their normalized characters for Urdu are listed in Table 3.16.

4. Discussion

Urdu and Pashto are written in the same script i.e. Arabic script which is cursive in nature. It does not have concept of space between words, rather final form of character at the end indicates word boundary. In English if we want to write multiple word url we can separate it using hyphen, 'two-word' or even if we simply write them together they are easily readable, 'twowords'. In Urdu and Pashto if we write words without any separator character, they may assume wrong shape decreasing the readability. For example, 'دس دن' (ten days) will be display erroneously 'دسدن' if written without separator. The final shape of character can be obtained by putting space or zero width non-joiner at the end of word. Users are more familiar with use of space instead of zero width non-joiner. Majority of the users even don't know about the concept of ZWNJ. To cater this issue, it is recommended that space should be allowed in domain names at interface level and should be replaced with ZWNJ before processing.

Arabic script include multiple code points which have similar display shape and it is language specific decision which code point is relevant to it. If multiple code points having same shape are allowed in a language it can be a source of phishing. For example, Arabic letters ◦ U+647 and ◦ U+06C1 have the same shape. First one is used in Arabic, Pashto and some other languages whereas second is used in Urdu. To prevent the security risk, such characters are normalized according to the Table 3.11 and Table 3.17 given in Pashto and Urdu sections.

In traditional domain name system, country level domain names are assigned. In the new system of internationalized domain names, it is not sufficient. There can be multiple languages in a country or a single language being spoken across the boundaries of countries. A single script is also used for many languages. For example, there are multiple languages in Pakistan which use Arabic script. Character sets and normalization rules for each language are different. To handle all the languages, sub domains can be maintained under country level domain name.
